Description :

Prsentation de l'diteurWhy can't the Chinese say "I love you"? Can you wear pyjamas on the streets of Shanghai? Why is it so difficult to hear Chinese tones? In this charming, original book, Harvard linguist Deborah Fallows draws on her three years of living and working in China to provide the answers to these puzzles and many more. Using her own struggles and triumphs with the study of Mandarin as a guide, Fallows manages to describe the workings of the language in a way that is both intelligible and entertaining. Her anecdotes and stories illustrate how Westerners have to think in a fundamentally different way to survive in China. This book will appeal to anyone with an interest in China, be they first time tourists, seasoned business people, or just the idly curious. Accessible and revelatory, it will help you discover this extraordinary nation for yourself. Revue de presse Any traveller who shudders at the prospect of deciphering Chinese should be armed with a copy of his book -- The New Yorker Fallows sparkling memoir makes us feel we are on the streets with her haggling with merchants and cops and learning to be rude and friendly, Chinese-style... I can't think of a better book for someone who wants to understand the lovable, infuriating and hilarious country that is China -- Washington Post China seems an impossible mountain to climb, yet Deborah Fallows takes a less travelled path, climbing the mountain from the inside... both vital and a joy to read -- Ken Auletta Presentation de l'auteur Why can't the Chinese say "I love you"?
